HISTORY: The Bolger Center was formerly owned by The Sisters of Mercy, a Catholic religious community, who purchased the property in 1931 and used the Generalate (Main Building) as a residence and school. In 1970, the St. Maurice School was constructed (North Building) and specialized in the education of learning disabled children. In 1980, the United States Postal Service purchased 83 acres of land for the purpose of centralizing their training programs. In May 1996, the Board of governors renamed the facility the William F. Bolger Center for Leadership Development, to emphasize the Postal Service's goal of providing a premier learning environment for the training and development of employees. In 2004, through a partnership between the United States Postal Service and the Smithsonian Museum, the Bolger Center was selected to showcase and celebrate the history of the Postal Service with joint exhibits of historical significance on the subject.
